1. The greeting is the first thing callers hear, so keep it short.

2 Say it's an automated assistant and what it can do. Brightline's greeting offers answers, taking details or booking a tune-up, and tells anyone who smells gas to hang up and call nine one one.

3 If you record calls, add that to the greeting, and check your state's rules. Some states require everyone on the call to agree.

4 Then call in and listen for both lines. It's the last call on the test-call log.
